PREFACE.

The contents of THE OFFERING have been collected at intervals, and composed or arranged for special occasions, during the past ten years. The general satisfaction they have given to both Choirs and Congregations, and the urgent requests of many eminent choristers and professional friends, have induced me to select for publication, those metrical tunes and pieces which I judged likely to be most generally useful and practicable.

During the past year, a few Motetts have been published, in sheet-music form, as an experiment, under the general title "MORNING and EVENING," and the marked success of those pieces leads me to believe that the public will find in THE OFFERING a large amount of new, interesting, and effective music for social practice, as well as the ordinary and special occasions of Divine worship; at any rate, every piece in this collection has been tested by repeated use.

Although the number of metrical tunes is much less than usual in works of this kind, it is thought that The Offering contains a greater variety of new and useful tunes than can be found in any collection of Sacred Music published within many years.

A few pages have been devoted to "Responsive Selections," to be used thus; the Minister reads the first versicle, and the choir chants the first reponse; the Minister then reads the second versicle, and the choir chants the second response, and so to the end, the choir concluding with the AMEN, or one of the Ascriptions or Glorias, as may be preferred.

This method of commencing Divine worship has been adopted in many churches within a few years, and is steadily growing in favor. Should, however, any Church or Minister object to this innovation, the reponses of each selection may be used by themselves as a complete chant, without the accompanying versicles.

It is deemed proper to say that in this work the title Motett is given to those pieces, longer than Sentences, shorter than Anthems, which may be effectively sung by four or more voices, though in most cases a chorus is preferable; while the word Anthem is used to designate more elaborate pieces whose full effect imperatively requires a large number of voices. Under the heading Hymns, will be found those selections which, although not intended for use as ordinary metrical tunes, are specially adapted to the poetry to which they are set.

A special Clef has been adopted, to designate the Tenor part. While it imposes no additional labour upon the singer, (the notes being read precisely as with the G Clef,) it serves to clearly mark the score to the player, and enables the Tenors to identify their part at a glance.

Moderato.

1. Come, O di-vine She-ki - nah, come, With glo-ry fill this new a-bode ; Come, in our waiting souls there's room ; Display thy pow'r, a pre-sent God.
2. Come to our shrine, a God of Love, Come as a God of Love and Pow'r ; Refresh Thy people from a - bove, As dews re-fresh the drooping flow'r.
3. Come as a spring and fount of grace, Our temple with Thy light a-dorn, As crimson rays of glo - ry trace The gorgeous ris-ing of the morn.
4. Come as a dove, with wings of peace, The sad to cheer, the bruised to heal ; The wounds that sin hath made to ease, The cov'nant of our life to seal.
5. Display Thy pow'r, a present God, Come, in our waiting souls there's room ; With glory fill this new a - bode, Come, O di - vine She - ki - nah, come.

INTRODUCTION TO THE INDEX OF ANTHEMS, MOTETTS, HYMNS, &c.

The Anthems, Motetts, Quartetts and Hymns are classified thus; Class 1, consists of pieces intended for use at the opening or close of Divine Service, and suitable for choirs of ordinary proficiency. Class 2, comprises those pieces designed for the same general purpose as the foregoing, but requiring a higher degree of musical skill and attainment on the part of the singers. Class 3, embraces the selections for special occasions, as ANNIVERSARIES, ORDINATIONS, INSTALLATIONS, and FESTIVALS; also for advanced Singing Schools, concerts of Sacred music, and Musical Conventions. No classification is made of the Chants, as the character of the words will be a sufficient guide to the Chorister as to their appropriateness in time and place.
